How General Johnston Fell. On Sunday, April 6, 1862, Jonnston, with his eager army, began his fateful fight. He handled his army with builtiant skill and impetnosity. Whenever there was a pause in the onward movement he led the charge in person. To those who saw him that day, as the writer did, in all the glorious fever of delirious success. mounted upon a magnificent steed, his massive figure securing to enlarge to giganeic size with the ardor of battle, his face iff ine with his indomitable spirit of fight, he was the ideal embodiment of the firry essence of war. He threw himself with reckless indifference into dauger. A. d the last charge that broke the Federal position was led by him in person under a perfect bie z. of flame and hail, his norse shot in tour places, the clothes piere d, his foor sole out ty a minnie, but his person untouched. It was in this supreme moment of victorious onset, a d cisive triumph seemiegly and surely in his eager grasp, that a faral builer struck him, a small would under the knee, sev ering the poplical erery.

Givernor Harris, of Tonnessie, who was on his staff, rode up to him, seeing him reel in his saddle, and holding him steady, asked him: "General, are you wounded?" He replied deliberately and with emphasis,

'Yes, and I fear seriously.' He was lifted to the ground. His boot was full of blood, and the life current pouring ou beyond recall. He never spoke again. Gen. Preston knelt by him, and asked him passion.

ately: "Gen. Johnston, do you know me?" Gen Johnston smiled faintly. Ling in a ravine, out of range of the merciless builets, be was dead in a twickling.

Could General Johnston have had immediate medical acception be would have survived. His staff surgeon was Dr. David W. Yandell of Kentucky, and he was away from h.m under circumstances that constitute the most touching and beautiful features of this romantic death. The Federals in retreating, left of course, their wounded behind. In riding forward General Johnston came scross a squad of wounded Fed eral soldiers. Scopping, he kindly addressed them, and asked if any were badly wounded. Then turning to his staff, he remarked:

"It nearly breaks my heart to see men in that uniform suffering, dector," addressing Yan gell. "Do stop and see if you can do some thing for these poor fellows.

Dr. Yandell stopped on this humane mission, and Gen. Johnston owed his death to the ab sence of skill and instruments, and this ab socie; was due to his tender humanity to the wounded foe-a humanity the more striking be cause it was exhibited in all the excitement of

THE glare and glitter of vice often exercises a fatal attraction on young people who have had no epportunity of seeing the end of the path its votaries tread. A striking exhibition of one stage in that sad and shameful journey may be seen in the Hudson county jail at the present time. In wird No. 5 is a woman still bearing traces of rewarkable beauty. who was once knews as the queen of vice in New York. In 1865 sne occupied a splendid mansion in this city, which was the resort of profligate brokers and busines men who were thriving on the profits of war contracts, and who lavished their money upon her. She dressed with the utmost magnificance, frequently wearing on her hands jewels worth fifty thousand dollars. Now, broken down in health and behind prison bars, she pleads for a few cents to purchase a oup of tea. Deserted by her friends, stripped of the proceeds of her sio, her constitution shat ter d she is on the threshold of the grave. -Christian Herald.

DR. B. W. RICHARDSON, the emiaent English physician and temperance advicate, presided a few weeks ago at a large meeting held utary change in the entire system, when in a to advocate the universal use of what is techniodly kowa is E gland as "whole meal bread." O sol the speakers maintained that the bread is common use was forty per cent. deficient in sustaining qualities. An entire grain of wheat contained everything that was required for nourishing purposes, and yet the better half of it was wasted, and this half was a much health. ier food, especially for children. A white loaf, in fac:, was only half a losf, for a large portion of the material that formed muscular flesh, and nearly all that formed bone, were taken from it. Children fed on white bread were very liable to suff r from rickety bones, consumption, and bad teeth, because their food did not nomish them properly - Christian Herald.
